Thinking aloud—with a mind to think on poetry

Over the past ten years The Testimony has published a number of my poems, and I have published many more in three books. God willing, it is my intention to publish a fourth and final book of short poems under the above title during 2004. In terms of size, paper and print quality, and the general mix of secular and religious poems, it will be similar to Walking with God, published in 2002, to which it could suitably be described as a companion volume for the bookshelf.

Thinking Aloud will contain 579 poems, none of which has been published before, and these will represent the full range of subjects which have engaged my thought processes. They include things which at first sight appear humdrum and mundane, through descriptive pieces about places, situations, circumstances and institutions which have influenced me, and on to poems of praise and prayer in contemplation of the sheer wonder of our heavenly Father's eternal purpose with us.

Any brother or sister or ecclesia requiring further information, or wishing to purchase a copy or copies, should telephone me or write to me. Amongst other things, this exercise will help me to firm up on price and the size of the print run.
